Podcasting for Learning: Some Successes and Challenges

Estelle Siener | Associate Director of Academic Computing, Canisius College
William H. Siener | Department of History, Buffalo State College

Creators of multimedia content have lots of choices to make: software tools and delivery format, as well as creative content. In this case study, representations of museum artifacts and historical documents have been combined with dramatic readings and sound effects to create exciting podcasts about local history. The discussion will include presentation options, including the use of iTunesU on campus. Along the way, there have been lessons learned about the benefits and the challenges of using these exciting new media.

Tuesday, May 22   2:30pm – 3:30pm   ALC Mountain View Room

Changing the Face of Blackboard

David Lees, Ed.D. | Director, Instructional Technology and Distributed Learning, Saint Joseph's University

Frequently when one explores a Blackboard course one gets lost in a flood of folders and documents. This very vertical display of information makes it difficult for students to navigate through the course and find information. At Saint Joseph's University, we have been introducing online faculty members to the "Learning Unit" tool in Blackboard. This tool enables one to deliver information in Blackboard in a horizontal manner.

Saint Joseph's University has also added blogs, wikis, and podcasts to Blackboard through the use of a building block. We will demonstrate how these new tools are working in Blackboard and describe how the faculty is implementing them.

Wiki Redux or Vicki's Wikis: Using Wikis for Personal, Professional, and Collaborative Administrative Projects

Vicki Rosen | Head, Distance Learning Services & Regional Libraries, University of San Francisco

Last year's conference presentation on wikis inspired me to experiment with pbwiki.com. Within a month, I created nine free wikis for various projects, both in my department and for a California academic library association. The "sketch book" qualities of the wiki are ideal for developing and polishing drafts of work, whether shared or personal. In August, USF regional campus librarians adopted the collaborative potential of the wiki for collection development decisions, online circulation standards, and personnel policies.

See wiki examples and learn the differences between free and fee-based service levels, using pbwiki.com as a model.

Tuesday, May 22 3:45pm – 4:45pm ALC Mountain View Room

Disaster Recovery – Preparing the Faculty

Carol Scheidenhelm, Ph.D. | Director, Learning Technologies and Assessment, Loyola University, Chicago
Jack Corliss | Manager, Teaching, Learning and Research Services, Loyola University, Chicago

Disaster planning is a proactive measure many campuses neglect until there is a crisis. Following the devastation of Hurricane Katrina, Loyola University Chicago recognized the need to provide a cohesive plan to ensure continuity of campus business. This session outlines the planning, implementation and assessment of the university's preparedness initiative and focuses primarily on the faculty training initiatives implemented as part of the overall preparedness plan.

Wednesday, May 23 9:00am – 10:00am Maggiano's

Webconferencing Software Review

Dale deViveiros | Gonzaga University (IP conferencing)
Michael Clay | Seattle University (Adobe Connect)
Tracy A. Chapman, M.Ed. | Creighton (iLinc)
John Bansavich | University of San Francisco (eLuminiate)

The panel will discuss the four different webconferencing platforms – IP videoconferencing, Adobe Connect, iLinc, and eLunminate. Each school will present how these conferencing solutions have been implemented and how each is performing.

Wednesday, 10:15am – 11:15am Maggiano's

The Impact of Classroom Activities via Video on Distance Student Learning

Tracy A. Chapman, M.Ed. | Executive Director for eLearning and Technology
School of Pharmacy and Health Professions
Alynne Wize, M.Ed. | Assistant Director, Division of eLearning
Office of eLearning and Academic Technologies
School of Pharmacy and Health Professions
Creighton University

This presentation will describe the model and tools used to successfully add video lecture components to courses with minimal faculty and staff time. Assessment data examining the impact on distant student learning will be discussed.   The presentation is based on data collected from students enrolled in Creighton University's distance doctor of pharmacy program. Data was collected in the form of narrative student comments and grade comparisons between courses in fall 2005 and the same courses with the same instructors in fall 2006. The data clearly indicates the availability of classroom activities via rich media files had a positive impact on student learning and engagement.
