Loyola University today is expected to name Indiana University associate athletic director M. Grace Calhoun as its new athletic director.

She will replace John Planek, who left last month after 12 years as athletic director.

Calhoun, 40, will become the second female athletic director locally, joining DePaul’s Jean Lenti Ponsetto.

She has been at Indiana since 2005. Calhoun’s responsibilities at Indiana centered on academic and student development and support services for athletes.

Calhoun served three years as associate athletic director at Dartmouth College before coming to Indiana.

Before that, Calhoun was associate executive director of the Patriot League for five years. Calhoun also was an assistant athletic director at St. Francis University in Loretto, Pa.

Calhoun is a graduate of Brown University, where she earned a degree in electrical engineering and was a member of the varsity track team. She earned postgraduate degrees at the University of Florida and an MBA from Lehigh University.

Calhoun and her husband, Jason, a professional golfer, have four children.

Calhoun is expected to begin at Loyola in April but will take part in the planned March 3 ribbon-cutting ceremony for the Ramblers’ new Norville Intercollegiate Athletics Center.
