Loyola employees to be part of Pink Glove Dance contest

October 15, 2012

Loyola University Health System nurses and staff recently set aside time from their busy schedules to showcase their dancing talent in a Pink Glove Dance video. This video is part of the Pink Glove Dance phenomenon that is sweeping the nation in support of breast cancer research.

Loyola and several other hospitals have entered an online competition to find the hospital with the best video. Loyola nurses, physicians, breast cancer researchers and staff from across the health system came together to choreograph and rehearse before filming and submitting the video at the end of September.

"Loyola employees were thrilled to be a part of the Pink Glove Dance contest," said Karen Pelletiere, RN, BSN, lung transplant coordinator, Loyola University Health System. "They had fun dancing for a good cause to get more people talking about breast cancer awareness."

The winner will be announced on Friday, Nov. 2, and will receive $10,000 for a breast cancer charity of their choice. To vote for Loyola’s video, visit: http://pinkglovedance.com/competition/vote.php through Friday, Oct. 26. Voters must be logged into Facebook to cast their vote.

If Loyola is selected as the winner, the organization will put the funding toward breast cancer research at Loyola University Chicago Stritch School of Medicine's Oncology Institute.
